A St. Louis candymaker estimates that the boys and girls in that city consume fourteen tons of candy every day. The idea of the young persons, we suppose, is to make up by heart what nature has denied in sweetness.

THE NEW YORK Herald thinks there are numerous gratifying evidences that the Republican leaders have heard from the people, but it declares they have not heard enough "they will make believe to be good and that is all."

A New York photographer keeps a sealskin-saque. He says: "A poor girl will pay a dollar extra to be taken in a sealskin saque. She likes to show her friends that she can look like a lady on dress occasions. I charge $1.50 for that. This Gainsborough hat I generally throw in for fifty cents. It's a great catch, I tell you. Girls all come here now."

SENATOR DAVID DAVIS, of Illinois, has hopes of being his own successor, but they are vain if the Illinois newspapers can be relied upon as correctly representing the prevailing sentiment in the coming legislature. Neither republicans nor democrats are favorable to Davis. Indeed, the country quite generally is not hankering for politicians who are neither independent nor members of a party.

REPRESENTATIVE SPRINGER, of Illinois, has introduced in the House a resolution proposing a constitutional amendment in regard to the election of President, Vice-President and members of Congress. It may be doubted if it will be adopted, for the reason that it seems wise and just. Its chief features are that the President and Vice-President shall be elected by the direct vote of the people, the electoral college being abolished; the term of office shall be six years and the incumbents are made ineligible for re-election for the next succeeding term. The term of congressmen is made three years. Of the many propositions to change the existing order of things, none has seemed wiser, simpler or better than Springer's. Since the early days of the republic, there has been but one president (Hayes) who did not use his office to further his chances for re-nomination. They have all done things they would not have done had they known that when their terms expired they must certainly go out of office. Hayes would have figured for re-election had he not known that a second nomination was among the impossibilities. Springer's proposition for lengthening the congressional term is also wise. There are very few men so quick and brilliant as to become really active and useful members during the first session of Congress; and the second is so short, and so much unfinished work is piled up that only the shrewdest members are able to get their measures through. A four year's term even would be better than either two or three years, for then a congressman might be of some service to the nation, and he wouldn't be under the necessity of devoting so much of his time to securing re-nomination. As suggested it is hardly probable that Congress will take the necessary steps for the change. Congress seldom does what it ought to do.

It was an act of belated justice for the Supreme Court, last week, to return the title of the famous Arlington estate to the son of General Robert E. Lee. The Federal government obtained possession of the property at a tax sale, which was brought about through a piece of dirty trickery. General Lee was serving in the Confederate army, and the Arlington estate was within the Union lines. Under these circumstances the commissioner appointed to collect taxes made a rule that he would only receive payment from property owners in person—well knowing, of course, that Gen. Lee could not venture within the lines of the army he was opposing in the field. The estate was thereupon put up at auction and the Federal government became the purchaser and established on the property thus acquired a vast cemetery for Union soldiers and a fort. Of course, when the action of the Federal government in such a matter is referred to, the acts of its temporary agents, filled with the vindictive passions of the time, is meant; for the government has through this decision shown that as an organization it is a government of justice, founded on law and incapable of being permanently used as an agency for the vindictive wrath that would wreak vengeance on a rebellious general by seizing on false pretenses the property of his wife and child. But though the title to the estate is now restored to the rightful owner, it is not probable that he will enter into actual possession. The government has the right to take land by condemnation for a fort and possibly also for a cemetery, and in any event it would be a practical impossibility to give up the ground appropriated for the latter purpose to the owner, and hence the probability is that the final effect of the decision will be that the federal government will simply acquire lawfully, after making due compensation, that which it has held for so long against law.

VENTILATED boots are the latest novelty. The design is to overcome the unhealthfulness of rubber. An elastic middle sole is arranged with air cells, connected with a tube extending to the top of the leg. The weight of the body at each step compresses the air from under the foot out through the tube. When the weight is removed the atmospheric action, or suction, supplies air, and thus a circulation is kept up at each step. It is said to be a good invention. We now hope to see a similar contrivance on some people's other boots, as well. It would be a great relief sometimes, in closely packed churches, to those who don't wear them—we mean a little ventilation or a little water.

EX-PRESIDENT HAYES calls his family home at Fremont "Spiegel Grove." There is a wicked ring about those words which we should think would be offensive to Mr. Hayes; they have a sort of reckless, dissipated sound like the name of a lager beer garden or a German picnic ground.
